About This Game

Carol has written a book about one of her previous adventures. She has put a lot of work into it, but after receiving rejections from several publishers, her enthusiasm for the project is beginning to wane.

Her hope is somewhat rekindled when a publisher who recently rejected her book sends her an SMS, telling Carol that he wants to meet her.

However, the publisher is not interested in Carol's writing skills, but in her aptitude for locating missing persons. He wants to hire her to find a missing eccentric author.

Its obvious to Carol from the very beginning that it's not an average missing person case. The author's wife was murdered 6 years ago. Just before his disappearance, a young woman was found murdered, with pages from the author's latest book stuffed into her mouth.

The Carol Reed series is just beautiful. It's relaxing while solving puzzles and watching the nice pictures of Norrköping and its surroundings. Thumbs Up!. This is one of the best Carol Reed games of all. I never get tired of these games. It is like traveling abroad and seeing different places and learning new things. Waiting for the next!. The Carol Reed games are wonderful point and click adventure games with an easy story, wonderful visuals and fun puzzles. Shades of Black is just as wonderful as the previous games even though it is a touch more adult in nature. The adult theme worked with the plot and wasn't overly done.

This game is the latest in the series of which there are 11 total. I recommend all of them to any lover of point and click games.. I found the game less interesting than the previous ones, the plot is complex with final twist, perhaps less characters to interact with. but it is always a pleasure to play. advice, Bosch's the damnation, Cold Case summer, Amber blood, east side story.. Shades of Black is the eleventh entry in Carol Reed's series. Here, Carol tries to publish a book about one of her previous investigation (The Blue Madonna) but fails to do so. However, one of the publishers contacts her after a writer disappeared without contact. It's up to Carol to find why Gerald Black is hiding from the world and who wants to hurt him.

To remind you, Carol is a British national that visited Sweden and fell in love with the country. She's now living there and is a private investigator. As the gameplay didn't change from Bosch's Damnation, the previous game and the first one to be on Steam, here's part of my Steam review for this one.

It's a point and click game, you find objects, you use them, you solve puzzles thanks to clues and you speak with people. The game is done with real life pictures and real people. There is no video inside but you can see differences in the pictures: people are making different expressions, if you open a door, you'll see it open.

It could be a walking simulator as you're walking from scene to scene without having to search something and each close-up doesn't bring everytime a clue or an object, just a nice view... and the fact that in real life, you would have looked at that.

The soundtrack is as usual a good one, and the voice acting is really interesting.

In terms of plot, the game is well-written. You're really going from surprise to surprise (Mrs Allegra was a huge help for example though your first meeting with her was kinda... intimidating). Besides, the achievements added aren't tied to the story but to actions you may do or not.... but there is one that nobody seems to find as it's the publisher and not the developer that did that (developers are selling their games on their site, I should perhaps play the older Carol Reed, now that they accept ways to pay that I can access).

Seriously, Shades of Black is really a good game. It's maybe less focused on Swedish culture like in Bosch's Damnation due to the fact that you've gone from museum to museum in that one but it's still enjoyable. Good idea to bring it on Steam!

Though I've only played this for a short time I found it different than most hidden/adventure object games I played. The tutorial was very straight forward and simple. I liked how real pictures are used and people with voices. I liked looking for things without all the clues (like sparkles saying "LOOK HERE!") It made the game more challenging having to watch for the cursor icon to change from a yellow dot to a hand, magnifier or gears. It was nice to be able to pan around the room by clicking on the far right or left arrows when they appeared. I can say I like the game thus far.. pros

- lots of exploring in a number of different and gorgeous looking environments.
- there are some interesting indoor and outdoor locations such as Sala Silver Mine Suite and Eco Lodges. these locations presenting with immersive and colorful first-person realistic photographic stills. it feels to you as if you re really there!
- there are many hard to solve but enjoyable puzzles.
- relaxing soundtrack
- lengthy gameplay.

cons

- story concluded pretty cliché in the end
- pixel hunting some in door locations.
- sometimes you don't know what to do next.. I have play for a few hours and it shows me all of the time spent and my accomplishments but it will not let me access the two times I saved the game. This game sucks!!!!. I loved this game
